Mr. Paul... Street interview

Well I notice the sidewalk here are littered. I suppose that's because this is a retail district. Merchants around this section seem to have done more to modernize their store fronts and displays than the more intensively congested downtown sections. In use of signs, add tasteful display...clothes, shoes, mass-produced retail items.

Now I don't like the idea of the streets being littered. (More so here than elsewhere!) Well, for this particular type of section I would think that people would concentrate more on disposing of their litter in the approved fashion. I notice that the newspaper disposal boxes. Certainly isn't too much of an excuse for that.

This is a pretty bad intersection (Arlington). One of the worst in the city, especially around the close of the working day. I'm told it takes at least an hour to get through here. I know in trying to get out of the city we left from this intersection and it took 55 minutes to get about a mile and a half. Of course that's a new problem here in Boston. You smell a lot of traffic fumes around here too. That's a very tasteful display here, (Sneer of Gilt.)

I think this is one block here, that makes an impression on everyone that passes through it. (Here...any part of reason) Churches, and the fact that it's here again we come to the stores...tasteful display without actually being ostentatious about it. Everything displayed in good taste...

I'm particularly impressed by the gothic church up there (pulls the street up) yes.

Sidewalks are wide, but the streets are narrow...or at least we aren't able to accommodate all the traffic. But this isn't a main traffic thoroughfare, so I don't think it makes much of a difference... You still get that small, that restricted small...a combination of offices, rubber, and everything else...city smell I suppose. Something burning somewhere.

Most of the heating seems to be...soft coal. You don't find too much of it around this area, but I think a lot of these merchants should get together and agree to use oil...something that doesn't create a haze or annoying fumes.

Books Bros...one of these days I'll work up to buying a suit here...with accessories.

I could say something about Simms tailor...It's just unusual for that they sell to be housed in...you think of it as a department store, but it doesn't look like a department store, even though I like it.

(alley) Well this is an improvement over some streets I've seen here. At least they put the trash in the alleys behind the shop, instead of sticking it out on the sidewalk. But the things that impressed me when I came to Boston, I lived in Washington for many years...and their alleys are comparable to some of our clean streets here. They're paved, most of them, disposal is taken care of thoroughly and efficiently. Here all the alleys reek me of slums. You use a beautiful facade on the street and you go around the corner and there's this alley...usually unpaved, muddy if it's rainy. Thank
That's a sneaky little operation...you'd never know that was done there. (The scene) Yeah. Imagine they'd work better upstairs where they could see the street to speak where they had good light. With the shades pulled down they wouldn't know whether it was day or night...but I guess they have to have that since they're a clothing store, not a factory as such.

More accommodations for off street parking. That I could say a lot about, and I guess a lot has been said about it.

I walk along sometimes and see trash and litter along the streets, and I wonder what would happen if a giant vacuum cleaner came along and swept them all up. I think the buildings would fall down.

I think one thing we do need here is more driver courtesy so far as the pedestrian is concerned. He really takes his life in his hands.

(Garden) They've done wonderful job here...paving the walks, replanting after the hurricane. being so accommodating to fill the pool for lactating. I understand they put up a christmas display too, somewhere around here.
