Make a couple of typical designs - To be more simple than the narthex windows.

Rector writes: "...the areas where these windows are to find their place seems hardly to ask for the same kind of treatment (as the narthex)... it would not seem fitting to have such an elaborate scheme..."

We have tried to simplify these latter windows. The problem in small inexpensive windows is that the cost of mechanical connections, such as removal of old glass and installation of new, scaffolding and other details remain the same, no matter how inexpensive the glass. We would like to put as much in these windows as the sketch suggests, but I am afraid the cost would remain about five hundred dollars a pair.

The only way of reducing this would be with a very drastic simplification of design, as indicated in the sketch devoted to Saints Jerome and Athanasius. Here we have represented Saint Jerome's cross potent, fished or pointed at the base, and Saint Athanasius' usual symbol of the book.

In this manner we might be able to make windows that are in perhaps less important places, for as little as four hundred thirty dollars a pair.
