

THE WEEK BEFORE CHRISTMAS

Christmas is in the air. Secretaries, the MIT Matrons and men from Physical Plant have hung wreaths and trimmed trees all around the Institute. Even the Honeywell 800 at Instrumentation Lab's W7 Bldg. has done its share of decorating. The computer produced a wall mural of Santa and his reindeer by typing out the pattern with type faces. The mural is on display in W7's lobby at 75 Cambridge Pkwy.

Today at noon, the MIT United Christian Fellowship is sponsoring a Christmas songfest in the MIT Chapel, and tomorrow, the MIT community is again invited to attend the Christmas Convocation in Kresge Auditorium at 11:00 a.m. Dr. Howard Thurman, Dean of Marsh Chapel of Boston University, will give the Christmas message.

For last minute shoppers, there is time left to buy a special Christmas gift. Handsome prints and original drawings are on sale in Hayden Gallery.

A reminder: MIT will be closed Monday (December 24), but Monday (December 31) will be a normal working day.

RETIREMENTS

As of January 1, there will be some big shoes to fill in four Departments at MIT. Ethel Cogley of Photo Service, George Broussard of the Department of Civil Engineering, Benjamin Diver of the Research Laboratory for Electronics and Physical Plant's Ab Stodder will retire from MIT.

Together these employes have contributed some one hundred thirty four years of service to the Institute.

"Are you going to be able to make it to work on time coming all the way from Salem?" These were the words of Manager Frank Conant when Ethel Cogley had her job interview back in 1936. Ethel has not only arrived at work on time-- except in stormy weather--but she loves commuting. Her friends at Graphic Arts say this is because Ethel makes friends wherever she is. There is truth in this, for Ethel--ever since Photo Service moved from Bldg. 3 to 211 Mass. Ave.--takes the subway only as far as Kendall Sq. then walks through the halls of MIT visiting with friends along the way. For 26 years, accounts payable have been under Ethel's supervision in addition to arranging for professional and amateur photography exhibits at Photo Service.

For George Broussard, 36 years at MIT have been almost equally divided between first what was the Department of Biology and Public Health--now Department of Biology--and later MIT's Department of Civil and Sanitary Engineering--now the Department of Civil Engineering. His work has been the preparation of culture media, biochemical solutions and bacteriological stains for students testing bacteria. George also does work for the Medical Department making sanitation checks in the dining halls around MIT and takes periodic bacteriological examinations of the Alumni Pool water. (George will continue working on a part-time basis for the Medical Dept.) George's retirement plans include lots of fishing on Cape Cod, reading and outdoor work at his home in Billerica.

Benjamin Diver, supervisor of RLE's Photo Lab, may free lance after retiring. Ever since 1912, Ben has been involved in photography. He did photographic work in his birthplace, London, England, and in Canada before coming to MIT in 1944 when he began work in the Radiation Lab. (Among his subjects: Lord Chamberlain and Rudyard Kipling.) Ben's first job at MIT took him back to his homeland to the Rad Lab's field station, the Telecommunications Research Establishment, in Malvern, England. TRE sent him to France to photograph radar in the battle fields. In 1945, Ben returned to look after photo studies at Bedford, and when the photo lab there closed down that same year, he went to RLE to supervise the photo lab there. Besides his free lance work, Ben plans to spend more time on two favorite hobbies--painting mural decorations (medieval style) and working on his Old English Pub rumpus room at his home in Lexington.

Ab Stodder hopes to do some traveling. Chances are, though, that when he's in town, he'll be dropping by the Institute to visit old friends. Ab is MIT's only employe to have completed 51 years of service. The long-time electrician has attended 50 MIT graduations and has done the wiring for those held in the old Rogers Bldg. across the River, the graduations which used to be in Symphony Hall and the Great Court and more recent ones in Rockwell Cage. Ab was a charter member and also served as the first president of the Quarter Century Club, the club for male employes who have been working at MIT for twenty-five years and more. Last year, Ab's friends filled Kresge Auditorium's lobby to salute his 50 years of service. Dr. Vannevar Bush, honorary MIT corporation chairman, presented Ab with a wrist watch from MIT.
