

READY TO GO

On June 12 at 10:30 a.m. the Cage doors will open wide and over 1,000 seniors and graduate students will march from the Armory into MIT's 98th Commencement exercises. Following in the academic procession will be the faculty, and watching all, an audience of about 3,500 proud parents and friends.

Perhaps the busiest man there will be President Stratton. Not only will he continue, at the seniors' special request, an MIT tradition of presenting each diploma and shaking hands with the recipient, but this year he will give the commencement address, also.

Preceding the big day will be military commissioning ceremonies on Thursday morning and, in the afternoon, a panel discussion on "The Graduate's Role in Tomorrow's World," planned by the seniors and moderated by their class president. Panel members will be four eminent friends of the Institute: Edward J. Hanley, '24, president of Allegheny Ludlum Steel, representing industry; Robert H. Winters, '33, president of the Rio Tinto Mining Company of Canada and formerly of the Canadian Parliament, for government; Dr. Howard O. McMahon, '41, president of Arthur D. Little, Inc., research and Dean Jerome Wiesner, education.

To get things in order for June 12 is a good month-long job for Physical Plant people. They build a stage, bandstand, stairs, railings; put down rugs; hang up drapes, flags, special lights, canopies; install power lines, PA systems, fans, fire extinguishers; and paint and check a staggering list of items, including the speaker's rostrum and banners and signs for alumni reunion classes.

THE MEN FROM LIS

At graduation exercises in Kresge recently, six MIT employees received certificates for completing two-year, tuition-free Lowell Institute School courses. Graduates of the electrical course were Victor Otero from Electrical Engineering, Matti Soikkeli (who last year completed the mechanical course, also) and Ivan Stokes of Instrumentation Lab, and Edward Weiner of the Lab for Nuclear Science. Mechanical course grads were William Buckley, Jr., of Instrumentation at Bedford and Walker Sloan, III, of the Nutrition Department.

This year, in addition to the regular subjects, there were three supplementary courses completed by a good percentage of MIT people. In "Transistor Electronics:" Henry Baldas-

"Probability and Random Variables" had two grads: Spiros Geotis, and Charles Greland, IL.

Completing "Digital Computer Programming" were George Catuna, Lincoln; John McKenzie, ESL; Walter McMurray, Chemistry; William Rabkin, RLE and Edward McKay, Jr., ESL.

ERRATUM

Missing from the May 20 story on tuition assistance was draftsman Paul Miller of Instrumentation Lab. He will graduate from Northeastern this June with the degree of Associate in Mechanical Engineering.

HERE AND THERE

From MIT's Publications Office -- an awesome statistic: Paper for 65,000 copies of the new General Catalogue, due in August, will amount to 3,090,000 linear feet (nearly 600 miles) in rolls 31 inches wide.

Dr. Carvel Collins (Humanities), authority on the late William Faulkner, has been awarded a Bollingen Fellowship to further his work on a major critical biography of the novelist. It will be his fourth volume on Faulkner (who was his personal acquaintance) and a full-time project.

Filming around the Institute have been a crew from National Educational Television.

They were doing a program on Norbert Wiener for next season's "Pathfinder" series on famous Americans, including Ben Franklin and Henry Ford. Profs. Peter Elias (EE) and Walter Rosenblith (EE) were interviewed at the TX-0 computer and Dr. Killian in the Great Court by series host Benjamin De Mott of Amherst College. Last year he was visiting professor of humanities here.

A FLASHY CAREER

Blinking down on Greater Boston for two months have been lights from Prof. Edgerton's Strobe Lab (EE). They're being used as experimental, airplane warning beacons on the Green Building, John Hancock, Museum of Science and the Blue Hill Observatory tower. The lights blink once a second; are controlled by photo conductive resistors to turn off during daylight. The reliability test period may be a year and so far, kids "Doc," they've been effective: "Nothing's run into the Green Building yet."

The man who made the beacons, and installed several of them, is Bill MacRoberts, Strobe Lab project technician and '54 Lowell Institute graduate. He has worked with Dr. Edgerton since the early days of rapid-flash lights and high-speed photography. After 22 years at MIT, Bill has only been away once, to participate in A-bomb tests on Guam in 1958. His home (which he himself built) is in Whitman; he has four children.

Bill's work has always been varied. During the war, he did wiring on pioneering photo flash units developed for Air Force night reconnaissance. And he worked on the original undersea photographic equipment designed by Dr. Edgerton for bathyscaphs and for Comm. Jacques Y. Cousteau's expeditions for the National Geographic Society. Another area of Strobe Lab research has been sonar -- at first for the purpose of positioning cameras underwater. A later application is a side-scanning sonar device for searching the ocean bottom; last summer it was used to find the wreck of the Vineyard Lightship, sunk off New Bedford in 1944, and to attempt locating the submarine Thresher.

Bill has assisted countless students with their theses, and outside people who have come to the Lab for help. Most recently, he has helped Boston doctors who have come to use short-duration strobes for photographing blood circulation in the human eye.

STUDENTS' SATELLITE

In the interdepartmental systems engineering class this semester, 28 seniors and grad students did complete preliminary designs and analyses for a six-ton, unmanned satellite. Called Advanced Orbiting Astrophysical Observatory (AOAO), the vehicle would carry a 100-inch telescope to observe planets and stars, as it orbited far above the earth's atmosphere with electrical power from a volleyball-sized nuclear reactor.

Members of the task force were from Aero & Astro, Electrical, Mechanical, Civil and Nuclear Engineering.

When the course was introduced last year, students designed an equatorial weather satellite. It was so good that the group gave a briefing on it in Washington, D. C. at the invitation of the U. S. Weather Bureau.
